Editor's Column

The explosion of knowledge at the global level due to technological dynamics has certainly redefined the very concept of education. The prevailing scenario of education--especially higher education--has become a matter of study and analysis for the scholars and practitioners who have a craving desire to face changes and challenges. It is because we, the human beings, are endowed with the faculty of choice and a free will.

Unlike other species, we are not programmed. We can make choices and use our free will to act and achieve our objectives. Despite the dramatic progress in ICT in education achieved so far at the school and college levels, much remains to be done: each country, to varying degrees, continues to struggle with issues of children out of school and illiterate youths and adults. Inequities in educational opportunities, quality of educational services and level of learning achievement persist by gender, rural/urban locality, ethnic background, and socioeconomic status.

The quality of learning and the capacity to define and monitor this quality is lacking in most developing countries. The means and scope of education continue to be narrow and confined to historical models of delivery, and the use of other channels continues to be ad hoc and marginal. The increase in quantitative and qualitative demand for education is not matched by an increase in resources.

At this juncture, it is safe to state that the polarity of views on the possibility of change is amazing. We, the publishers of Journal of research , are very much excited to view some aspects of these changes through scholarly articles contributed by august scholars and colleagues. The present issue contains papers with critical insight and analysis as well as systematic discussion and deliberation on various themes of language, literature, information technology, commerce and so on. We hope this will certainly be useful for the people who aspire change.
